

Jorge Angulo DDS

2012 New Year Newsletter

I

Hopefully you had a relaxing, fun filled and safe holiday season. Most of you who I saw this first week seemed to be a lot like me, you almost need a vacation from your vacation yet you know you need get moving on 2012.

Truffles & Trifles

Angulo Dental @Truffles & Trifles

2011 was another great year at the office that I informally call "Angulo Dental". As an office we celebrated by getting together at Truffles and Trifles for an evening of cooking lessons (although Michele doesn't need them-guess you know who typed this!) wine, and getting to know each others significant others better. It was a great time and I highly suggest it to anyone.

Around mid October (2011) we also quietly passed a major anniversary. It marked the 10 year anniversary of the practice. I took over Dr. Joe Pipkin's practice a month after September 11, 2001. At that time my wife and I rented a tiny house and had a one year old daughter. Fast forward ten years and we now have two daughters and a three year old boy. It is amazing how much you can learn in ten years and how a person can change.

There are so many things I was never quite prepared for in my training as a Dentist. For example witnessing so many of my younger patients start with us as grade school kids and end up as mature college students. I don't pretend that the office is the focal point of anyone's life (aside from mine maybe) but it has been heartwarming every Christmas to receive so many delicious snacks and sweets from you. I'm touched each time one of you goes far away on vacation and actually thinks enough of us to bring in a souvenir turtle (you know who you are).

We have had the great honor to be part of your lives as you bring in your wedding albums. On occasion you have swung by the office on days when you don't even have appointments to show us your newborn babies. I can recall a father's pride as his son got accepted to Yale or when grandparents happily gained custody of their grandson and brought the certificate in for us to see.

In life there are always ups and downs and so we have also experienced the misfortune of sharing the sadness of declining health both physical and mental, death of a loved one, and divorce. In spite of this I feel it is an enormous privilege to be your dentist and to be in your lives are you are in mine.

I wish the best for you in 2012 and look forward to seeing you sometime soon.

As Always, and thank you,

Jorge Angulo DDS

